Losing a significant relationship in life is never easy, especially after you and your former partner walked a journey together. The loss of a close relationship can feel like emotional amputation. You may feel sad and alone, as if you’re missing an important part of yourself. If you were on the receiving end of a break-up, you may feel angry, rejected or betrayed.

The good news is that the sadness doesn’t last forever, and brighter days lay ahead!

This book provides highly practical tips on how to get over a break-up, so you can heal and be happy again. The first section identifies multiple healing strategies in the aftermath of a relationship dissolution. Subsequent chapters offer thought-provoking perspectives on why your break-up may have occurred, and empowering ways to move on in your life – with new confidence and self-assurance.

Helen Keller once wrote: “When one door of happiness closes, another opens.” This book may show you how.
1. Let Yourself Grieve

When we feel pain from a loss, allowing ourselves time to grieve is one of the most important steps in the healing process. Find healthy outlets where you can safely express your emotions. Have a good cry (or a few), talk with supportive friends, write in a journal, see a counselor, or pray to your maker. Acknowledge the pain and hurt. Those who don’t allow themselves to grieve carry repressed pain which will inevitably affect future relationships. When you let yourself grieve, you give to yourself the gift of tenderness. In time, the sadness diminishes, and the tears fall less. Your healing has already begun.

“We can endure much more than we think we can; all human experience testifies to that. Grit your teeth and let it hurt. Don't deny it, don't be overwhelmed by it. It will not last forever. One day, the pain will be gone and you will still be there.”

— Harold Kushner
